Community Engagement Key Indicators
Founded as a "university without walls" in 1971, Metropolitan State acquired its first permanent campus and became part of the Dayton's Bluff neighborhood in 1992 when it occupied an abandoned hospital in a dynamic, low-income, racially diverse, highly mobile community on St. Paul's East Side. Using a participatory action-research assessment, the university identified community economic development, literacy, health and wellness care, urban education, community arts, and social services as areas for university-community partnerships. Today, faculty, staff and students work closely with neighborhood organizations to build multidimensional partnerships based on mutual interests, shared values and an ethic of reciprocity.

Institutional Identity and Culture
Visualization of an engaged campus

The university academic plan, presidential work plan and administrative affairs plan each highlight and reinforce the central role of community engagement in achieving the university's mission.

A 2012 community engagement audit found that nearly all community-based organizations in the surrounding neighborhood claim some level of partnership with the university.

Institutional Commitment
Joint university and Saint Paul Public Library which is the only joint university-community library in Minnesota and one of few in the nation. Nearly 3,000 community user cards issued.

Institute for Community Engagement and Scholarship (ICES), with an annual budget $482,611 and six FTE, is the largest and most active unit of its kind within the Minnesota State Colleges and Universities system.

The ICES Faculty Work Group is comprised of one faculty liaison from each of the university’s colleges and schools, each assigned 2 credits of annual workload to promote community-engaged teaching, learning, research and service within their respective academic unit, and for leading their college/school to pursue community engagement strategies and relationships.

Community faculty members with primary professional expertise bring authentic community connections to the classroom.

24.2% of the university’s Federal Work Study was spent on community service and literacy tutoring in FY13.

External grant allocations dedicated to supporting institutional engagement with community: Ecolab, National Endowment for the Humanities, American Library Association, Minnesota Indian Affairs Council, National Science Foundation, General Mills, Harlan Boss, Travelers and Katherine B. Anderson Foundation.
