- The Admissions Coordinator reviews the application and determines eligibility for intake.
- If eligible, candidate has an in-person meeting at Jeremiah Program during which the Admissions Coordinator further assesses the candidate's fit for the program.
- Based on the intake interview, eligibility for pre-admission is determined; additional or alternate resources may be recommended.

If candidate does not meet our criteria, we will refer her to other, more appropriate, agencies.

Pre-Admission Prepares Candidates

A rigorous selection process ensures that the women who enter Jeremiah Program are ready and able to seize this opportunity for creating a successful future. Once a candidate is accepted for pre-admission, she makes a 16-week commitment before being invited to participate fully in the program and reside on campus. The pre-admission process has three major components:

1. Empowerment Training: 16-week curriculum helps assess the appropriateness of the program for the family. Women gain an understanding about the responsibilities involved and work with a coach for guidance and support.
2. Screening: Verifies the candidate's ability to commit to the rigor of the program.
3. Interview: After screening, the candidate is interviewed by the Admissions Committee and a decision is made whether to invite her to participate fully in the program.
